Seeking Missing Boxes, 'No Questions Asked' Chicago Sun-Times

The company provides the boxes to legitimate users for a fee. But some are stolen, some are left when subscribers move and then used illicitly, and some are procured and then sold illegally.

Chicago Cable seeks about 36,000 unauthorized boxes - ones in homes but not being paid for - that are in the city, Coats said. Prime Cable of Chicago also has used similar programs.

About 300 converter boxes have been returned since Chicago Cable began sending out postcards about two weeks ago, Coats said. About 6,000 postcards have been sent.

The postcards say: "You may be in possession of one or more converter boxes required to receive certain cable television channels. Since our records also indicate that cable television service is no longer active at your address, we need to have our equipment returned to us."
